Communist agents in the United States could conceal themselves within any part of society, according to Sen. Milton R. Young, R-N.D.

Young, in a newsletter from Washington, said the Federal Bureau of Investigation has caught most red spies. But he added:

"Undoubtedly some are still operating, and at very high levels."

Young, member of a special Senate committee which works with the highly secret Central Intelligence Agency said Communist agents could "quite effectively hide away in almost any strata of our society—including far-right groups."

Said the Senator:

"Many of our most valuable CIA operatives in various countries throughout the world are actually high ranking Communist Party officials."

He identified the two toughest types of agents to detect as members of the Russian KGB, which is similar to our CIA, and the GRU or military espionage group.

Nothing is more important than being vigilant for communist activities in this country, said Young. But he warned:

"One of the worst mistakes that can be made is to accuse someone of being a communist when he may be entirely innocent."

The senator advised that any suspected communist be reported to the FBI and let them handle it from there on.
